Homoeopathic Perspectives on the Pathophysiology and Treatment of Skin Aging

(Advancements in Homeopathic Research, Vol. 10 No.4, November 2025-January 2026, Date of Publication 2025/11/01, Pages no. 29-35 ISSN : 2456-3668 (Print) // EISSN : 2583-5661 (Online) DOI : 10.48165/ ahr.2025.10.4.5)

Dr. Abhishek Dalmia[1], Dr. Navita Sharma[2], Dr. Pooja Saxena[3], Dr. Shahana Shah[4], Dr. Sajal Sharma[4], Dr. Mratyunjay Gupta[4]

[1]. Former Professor, Dr. M.P.K. Homoeopathic Medical college Hospital & Research Center, a Constituent College of Homoeopathy University, Jaipur, 302029

[2].MD Scholar, Department of Repertory, Dr. M.P.K. Homoeopathic Medical college Hospital & Research center, a constituent college of Homoeopathy University, Jaipur, 302029

[3].Former Associate Professor, Department of Anatomy & Sr. Consultant National Commission for Homeopathy.

[4]. Post Graduate Scholar , Dr. M.P.K. Homoeopathic Medical college Hospital & Research center, a constituent college of Homoeopathy University, Jaipur, 302029

Corresponding Author :

Dr. Abhishek Dalmia

Dr. M.P.K. Homoeopathic Medical college Hospital & Research center, a constituent college of Homoeopathy University, Jaipur, 302029

Abstract

The skin is one of the largest and most important organs in the body and comprises approximately 16% of the human body weight. It has a number of physiological functions that are essential to maintaining homeostasis, protection and social interaction. Protection, thermoregulation, sensation, water storage, absorption, expression, synthesis of vitamin D.